where we used to hang out had a number tattooed on his forearm. We asked him what that was for and he explained to us how he got it. I also remember seeing the photos in our history book of the piles of bodies at the camps. I wonder if they are still published. Absolutely disgusting but still a vivid picture in my mind.

The Survivor

Lyle – Thanks for publishing this article. You and your "Paper" run some exceptional pieces. I picked up this edition last night at Ralph's and read it ASAP. Amazing story and so disturbing.

Thanks for putting it out there, Lyle. We need to be reminded how misguided and erroneous humans can be unless courageous people are willing to stand up and call out the conventional political leaders/thinkers of the day.

Best regards,

Lyle, you did a wonderful job on the article. It was very chilling. I am now reading "Unexplained Mysteries of WW II" by William B. Breuer. Very short chapters, each leaving a big question.

Thanks for publishing the Auschwitz article.

The Survivor

Editor:

This story should have started with 'once upon a time', and ended with -- and they lived happily ever after. It's such a fairy tale! It was hard to read it any other way, there are so many inaccuracies. Maybe she has her own memories mixed with other elaborate holocaust stories she has read. I was particularly struck with how she refers to others as 'gentiles' sometimes and at other times refers to them as 'Germans.'

She states that her brother emigrated to Israel around 1920. Israel didn't exist until 1948 to my knowledge.

These among a host of other glaring inconsistencies. I sympathise that she was imprisoned for a year, I salute her survival and longevity but these things alone do not make her story true and or accurate.

I'm surprised you published it without fact checking it. Or at least a disclaimer of some kind as to it's accuracy.

/s/Julie Scott
San Diego County

Editor's Comment: Please explain why you think her story is a 'fairy tale.' Please outline what 'inaccuracies' and "glaring inconsistencies" you refer to. You insinuate we did no fact checking. You don't know us very well. We thoroughly research all of our stories; we personally interviewed Ms. Krancberg, we personally saw and photographed her tattooed prison number; we provided photographic evidence of the conditions at Birchenau and Auschwitz, and of the liberation. A couple of inaccuracies within your Letter to the Editor: Anyone who is not Jewish is a Gentile; thus the reference to Germans/Gentiles was accurate. The state of Israel declared its independence in 1948 but it had existed since biblical times as the ancient kingdom of Israel along with Judah. Had you done some research, some fact checking, you would know that. We are pleased to be able to enlighten you.

You are most certainly entitled to your opinion, but I wonder if you could tell me what credentials as an academic, as a historian, as a researcher, or as a teacher, you possess that you would be in a position to not only question her account but allege, without proof, inaccuracies, hers or ours?

We stand by her story.

During the 1930s, several economic and climatic conditions combined with disastrous results for South Dakota. A lack of rainfall, extremely high temperatures and over-cultivation of farmland produced what was known as the Dust Bowl in South Dakota and several other plains states. Fertile topsoil was blown away in massive dust storms, and several harvests were completely ruined. The experiences of the Dust Bowl, coupled with local bank foreclosures and the general economic effects of the Great Depression resulted in many South Dakotans leaving the state. The population of South Dakota declined by more than 7% between 1930 and 1940.

Despite a growing state population and recent economic development, many rural areas have been struggling over the past 50 years with locally declining populations and the emigration of educated young adults to larger South Dakota cities, such as Rapid City or Sioux Falls, or to other states.

Five of the state's counties are wholly within Indian reservations. Living standards on many reservations are often very low when compared with the national average. The unemployment rate in Fort Thompson, on the Crow Creek Indian Reservation, is 70%, and 21% of households there lack plumbing or basic kitchen appliances. A 1995 study by the U.S. Census Bureau found that 58% of homes on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation did not have a telephone.

Long Distance Bikers Visit San Marcos

Rosemary Haskins of San Marcos was recently visited by her grandson Jordan and his wife Laura. They drove to Portland, Oregon, from Albany, New York, then biked 1000 miles down to San Marcos, averaging 60 miles a day enjoying the rugged coastline of Oregon, the cool mornings in the Redwood National Forest. They spent a week with their grandmother, Rosemary. Haskins and now headed home.
